Hillary Rhodes Joins New Harbor Group

The New Harbor Group, a public relations and communications firm in Providence, is pleased to announce that Hillary Rhodes has joined their team as a content manager. Rhodes comes most recently from the Associated Press in New York, where she worked as a multimedia reporter for feature stories and breaking news.

"I'm honored to join a team that does such exciting public relations work," Rhodes said. "The New Harbor Group is a successful, forward-thinking company, and I'm looking forward to contributing to the wide and diverse client base they serve."

Previously a writer for NPR's "Prairie Home Companion", Rhodes was the founding editor of an award-winning website and newspaper for teenagers. She also has a master's degree from Northwestern University's Medill School of Journalism in Evanston, Ill.

"Hillary's experience, talent and energy will make her a great addition here at New Harbor," said David Preston, the firm's principal. "We're pleased to be able to add her to our team."
